CONCEPT

Science and technology communication has emerged as an interdisciplinary area of scientific knowledge and expertise across the world in recent times. Science awareness and scientific temper improve the living and thinking standards of people and help empower the citizens and societies. Science communication is the most important tool for sustainable development and towards a better world. In the era of globalization, the sustainable development is possible with use of latest technological interventions affordable to the common man. Bridging the digital divide, AI applications, social innovations, and creative solutions are the most important factors that can be achieved by means of effective science and technology communication. Scientific approach and its utility are needed to be percolated deeper into the grassroot level. Youths must be empowered through innovative technological skills which can be translated into startups and enterprises. A variety of academic and training programmes as well as research programmes are going on worldwide in science communication. It has been an area of interest to many researchers and practitioners that needs to be thoroughly assessed and analyzed for its scientific and social impact and implications. Abstracts/ papers, review articles, survey analyses, case studies, posters, and talks are invited on various aspects of the theme: “Science Communication: Research, Education, Training and Skill Development.”

SUB THEMES

The papers and deliberations may cover a wide range of sub themes, such as: i) Research studies, assessment studies, research outcomes of science communication projects and programmes; ii) Studies on various academic programmes and courses on science communication; iii) Impact assessment of various training programmes on different aspects of science communication and journalism; iv) Analyzing various skill enhancement programmes on science communication, etc.
